parental controls

I'm so wary of this. we've gone out of our way NOT to refer to them as parental controls because they're not. Traditional parental controls cover the who, what, where, and how much of a young person's online "life." These are built differently: for teens and families with teens and families -- and experts -- to help balance parental and caregiver needs with teens' desire for privacy and autonomy at this critical time in their lives. Can we maybe work with something like this?
