Works for me!

Thanks JB -- how does this sound. Abby, welcome your view here too.

- Family Center is designed to reflect the way that parents engage with their teens in the real world.
- Our goal is to equip parents and teens with new resources to help them have constructive and open conversations about online safety -- and to empower parents and teens in a way that still protects a teenager's autonomy and privacy.
- If parents wish to have more restrictive control around time limitations, we would encourage them to leverage the tools available at the device level.

Some quick points from my pov, FWIW: Time limits and other forms of restrictive mediation are t traditional "parental controls." Snap is not offering traditional parental controls but is following a course of instructive mediation and offering parental/caregiver tools that encourage open conversations between parents/caregivers and teens.

If parents want to adopt this approach, they could seek out tools on the device.

Eager for Abby's views, of course.

Thanks,
JB

Hi Abby and Jacqueline --

I'm working on FAQ for our Family Center rollout. One of the questions I think we will get: "Other apps limit screen time/allow parents to set time limits on their kids accounts -- why aren't you doing that?"

Wanted to get your thoughts and point of view on our stance around this. I started to answer this below -- but think we'll need to dive deeper. Is our view more this should be controlled at the device level and we would encourage parents/teens to leverage the tools available at that level? etc. Welcome any raw thoughts here -- and I can craft a response.

Q: Other apps limit screen time/allow parents to set time limits on their kids accounts -- why aren't you doing that?"

- Family Center is designed to reflect the way that parents engage with their teens in the real world.
- Our goal was to create a set of tools designed to reflect the dynamics of real-world relationships and foster collaboration and trust between parents and teens – and to empower parents and teens in a way that still protects a teenager’s autonomy and privacy.
