- 1 These updates look great, and in-line with our last discussion. I wonder if given how light it looks now (really just a recent chat history screen), we might be able to beef it up with some avenues for interaction btwn the parent and child? Like maybe a way to enter chat or something of the sort from the screen? some sort of AR treatment they can use together? Just some sort of way to engage together, on snapchat in a positive way? Not sure if feasible, but just my two cents given framing "family center" and reality "chat activity"

I think it may be a little strange to let the parent change the setting... I think the goal here is to give the parent visibility but not necessarily control. I'm not even sure we need to show the privacy setting. We can just show the friend list and also show the recent chat activity.

- 1 [REDACTED] for clarity, what about calling "Chat Activity" instead "Who Eric has been talking to"

- 1 [REDACTED] think this should say "Family Center" not "Link"

- 2 Small thing but I wonder if this icon in Conversation View suggests that the child is very young even though the child might be like 16 and taller than their parents (it might make them feel like they're being treated like a very young child)
